DETAILS OF THE CAPTURE OF YORK, 27 APRIL, 1813.

(Copy of letter from ————.)

SIR:

On Monday, the 26th April, about 6 o'clock P.M., we received Intelligence that the Enemy's Squadron were in sight from the Highlands standing in-shore, about ten miles east of York. The signal guns were fired, and the Commanding General, Sir R. H. Sheaffe, appeared to have given the requisite Instructions to the officers under his Command, as at 8 o'clock he was found at Table smoking his segar and conversing on indifferent topics with his Adjt.-General of Militia and Surgeon of the Marine. The morning dawn was somewhat hazy, and about 5 o'clock report from the Telegraph stated that a fleet of 5 vessels was to be seen. About half-past five a Corvette of 28, and a Brig of 22, with 13 sail of schooners and sloops, carrying guns and Troops, passed the Telegraph, came along there, and after assembling opposite Val Tor, stood round the Point and came to anchor in a Position indicating an intended landing, near to the old French Fort. At this time we had two companies of the 8th, about 180 men, two weak companies of the Newfoundland, 40 men of Glengarry, a company of artificiers, six artillery men, and about 300 Militia, in all, 500 men.

Some difference of opinion existed as to the opposing or admitting the landing. It was opposed, but effected under cover of the shipping, with little loss to the invading force, and very great to the Grenadiers of the Kings, whose gallant Captain, McNeil, was killed at the first landing, with about 30 of his men. They were embarrassed by an order to retreat to the woods, where the American Rifle Corps, now landed, had great advantage of them, and finally drove them in. As they retreated they were joined by the Militia, and suffered considerably from an accidental explosion of a Cartridge box at one of the 18lb Batteries. Being pressed by the enemy, the Troops retreated through the Garrison, and when the American Column had reached Gleggs Battery there was a tremendous explosion by the blowing up of the Magazine, which destroyed about 60 men of the Enemy, and among them their General Pike.

Had this moment of confusion been turned to advantage, a charge by our rallied force would have routed the enemy, divided and panic-struck by the dreadful Catastrophe they witnessed without knowing the precise cause. Such, however, was not our fate. Gen. Sir R. H. Sheaffe made a stand at the ravine, between Elmsleys house and the Bay, where, after a short consultation, he decided to abandon the Town & retreat to Kingston with the regular Troops & his Staff. Having adopted this resolution, he authorized Lt.-Col. Chewett & Major Allan, of the York Militia, to treat with the Enemy, &

(Evidently an account of the meeting referred to above.)

At a meeting of the magistrates resident in the Town of York, attended by the judges, the sheriff and the Rev. Dr. Strachan, the actual situation of the town and district was taken into consideration.

The enemy's fleet and army lying in the harbor, all our military defences at the port destroyed, the inhabitants disarmed and on parole, it is obvious that measures of as much energy as our circumstances admit should be instantly adopted to preserve order and personal security, to support and encourage the loyal, to suppress the disloyal and so confirm the wavering.

It is therefore unanimously declared that by the irruption of the enemy and temporary possession of this post no change has taken place in the relation of the subject to His Majesties' Government or laws, except as by such who were parties to the capitulation as prisoners of war and are under Parole of Honor not to bear arms until exchanged ;

That it is equally now as before the invasion high Treason to aid, assist, counsel or comfort the enemy ;

That all felons and evil doers are equally answerable to the laws as before ; that the powers of the Magistrates and members of the Law are unimpaired and continued to be so even during the actual possession of the Enemy, as the Commander of these Forces declared by a Military General order to his Troops ;

That Private property having remained unchanged, not only by the construction of the Law, but by the express terms of the Capitulation, the enemy himself disclaims the right assumed by some Individuals to transfer it from the true owner ;

That it is the duty of every good citizen to declare to the Magistrate all Instances of such unjust possession as may come to their knowledge, and of the Magistrates to enforce the restitution ;

That all persons desirous to testify their abhorrence of anarchy, which must prevail if principles adverse to the above declaration gain ground, are called upon to associate in support of the laws and to afford their aid to the civil Magistrates and their ministers ;

That the High Sheriff do publish and enforce this declaration.

N.B.—The American officers, as well of the General's staff, had pretended to give away the property of the Crown and Individuals to certain persons, sometimes merely gratuitously, at others under pretext of paying for or compensate services rendered during their possession of the Town.

STREETS GROVE, 8 Octr., 1814.

MY DEAR PARENTS:

Mr. Kemble leaves here this afternoon for York. The Americans have advanced, it is said, as far as Palmers, the other side of Black Creek, with 4,000 Men. 4,000 men are encamped under the mountain at Lewiston, under the command of Genl. Izard; it is supposed they will cross in a few [days]. Deserters say they are agoing to make an attack from Fort Erie, at the same time cross at Lewiston and attack us in our Rear. Alex. Hamilton talks of going to Montreal; he is very unwell. James received a letter from Saml. yesterday, that is for me. I have not received a line from any one of the Family since I left home. I suppose out of sight out of mind. We have just received an order to be in readiness to march at a Moment's warning. We are struck off of part of our rations, as there is but five days rations left for the whole army. Don't mention this again, if you do you will get me in a scrape. We had the promise of going to York after we had finished threshing wheat, instead of that, after we had finished that lot they set us cutting down the Trees this side of the Chippewa Creek. I suppose after we have finished that they will set us at something else. I suppose we shall see York when we return from Greenbush. Sir James Yeo has been kind enough to offer to bring up a Puncheon of Spirits and a Pipe of wine in the Fleet for every Regt. in the Right division; if he would bring up 2 or 3000 men it would be much better. Armstrong went past here the other day, on his way to Quebec. He expected to go down immediately, but I saw an order out to-day for him to remain until further orders. He will be much disappointed; he was to call at York on his way down, if he could. Mr. Kemble takes my watch to York, I broke the Glass the other day, which makes her useless to me; you may keep her now till I come Home. I am happy to hear Poor McCormack arrived safe. Genl. De Watteville and the Brigade-Major passed this [place] early this morning with a field-piece on the way to Chippewa. I suppose we shall follow him soon. Three of the Glengarrys went over the river the other day, remained all night in a House drinking, next morning returned; I believe, brought no news. In case of an alarm last night, all the Troops were to retire to the Beaver Dam. Mr. Kemble has called for my letter. I hope I shall here from you soon.

I remain, my dear parents,
Your most affectionate son,

PLATTSBURG, 1814.

Extracts from the Diary of Captain, afterwards Colonel J. H.

(Loaned by T. G. Wood, K.C.)

Montreal, Sept. 4th.—This day received a most unexpe twelve gunners, and a company of the 81st Regiment. It i near Lake Huron, 1000 miles above Montreal, shut out world and all active scenes of warfare. We are to proce

thus banished.

The army (left division) are in full advance on Platts-bur

General Izzard, Commander-in-Chief American Army, ha

will be our first attack. This force has been withdrawn

Sept. 5th.—To my great joy, an order reached me this m pleasure and alacrity, escaping by it the dreaded trip up th Slade being next in seniority, takes this duty.

Left Montreal in the afternoon in light marching or arrived at L'Acadie, twenty-five miles, at 10.30, and tru shall join before operations commence.

Sept. 6th.—Marched from L'Acadie to Champlain, situat three miles within the lines. It is a considerable village occupied by the Head Quarters of the American Army, pr our advance.

The Advance closed with the enemy and drove them Plattsburg. They made attempts at a stand at Dead Creek by their Gun Boats, but were rapidly repulsed, and one of Boats suffered by our fire.

Sept. 7th.—Joined the army and found all operations su houses in the Town were set on fire by red hot shot from th and a flag of truce was sent in, proposing to extinguish it, wh declined, and kept up their fire, warmer than before.

Our Picquets occupy the Town, and are constantly engaged with the enemy's. Whenever they observe an individual they direct a volley; if more than one or two, a cannon shot. They are busily employed finishing their works and mounting heavy guns.

Report says that our troops should have been permitted to follow up and carry the works at a dash, but timidity and indecision appear to prevail, where energy and vigor ought to exist.

Sept. 8th.—The situations for the different batteries are fixed on, but little has been done towards constructing them.

I was ordered to reconnoitre Cumberland Head, to select a place for disembarking the two ten inch Mortars and Stores on their way from Isle au Noix, and reported its not being a safe place for that purpose, as the enemy's guard boats and row gallies were constantly on the lookout.

I was gratified to find that my being ordered to join the Army was owing to the particular request of the Commanding Officer of Artillery.

Sept. 9th.—Anniversary of the surrender of St. Sebastian. Owing to mistake and neglect nothing was done last night, towards finishing the Batteries on the right attack, and, in consequence, the service of the Senior Officer of Engineers were dispensed with by Sir George Prevost.

I was again ordered to reconnoitre the Lake shore, to discover a favorable spot for the disembarkation of stores, and rode down as far east of the Isle au Motte, where our fleet are lying at anchor.

The guns were ordered to be placed in Battery this night. We accordingly, at midnight, moved down and were proceeding to the batteries, when a heavy fire of musketry was thrown in upon the working parties, and shameful to relate, the covering party ran off, scarcely returning a shot, the whole running in upon our guns like a flock of sheep. It was at the moment supposed the enemy had discovered the work and made a sortie to destroy it. Supports were immediately ordered down, but the enemy had not crossed the river, and the Battery was untouched. This occurrence gave cause for a severe order from General Power, who commanded the Brigade, and occasioned the loss of one Officer and a few men. An American was also made prisoner, or he had deserted.

On examination, the Batteries were reported by the Commanding Officer of Artillery as not being in a fit state to receive the guns, consequently as day broke, we were ordered to return to the Park. Thus had three days and nights elapsed and nothing effectually done.

Sept. 10th.—There appears to be a great deficiency of arrangement and decision. Assisted in laying down a Battery for the two ten inch Mortars. We again moved from the Park at midnight and placed the guns in Battery and found it in a most state and badly constructed as to thickness of parapet, embrasures, platforms and material.

Sept. 11th.—Sunday at daybreak all eyes were direct was set aside and we were not to open until a short time the assault of the works. Another order succeeded the las for us to commence our fire, and this we received after the been warmly engaged for nearly an hour. This indecision moment was particularly distressing.

About 8 A.M. our Commodore announced his approach his guns, a signal previously agreed upon, it was said. At a

Our battery, No. 1, on the extreme right, and consisti

we could not see the shipping, owing to the commanding gr

The Batteries opened about nine-thirty, and the enemy rep

The melancholy truth at length reached us, that the British been lowered and that the whole flotilla, with the exceptio gun boats, were in the enemy's hands.

In No. 1 the enemy dismounted one of our guns and m damaged the carriage of another, when we were ordered to w them under cover of the merlons. We had the light bras charge 3 lbs., opposed to heavy guns of the same calibre, in numbers and having a commanding position. Our casualt trifling, one killed and five wounded. A round shot stupefie some minutes, and an inch or two closer would have m
"shorter by the head."

In the evening we received orders to bring away the practicable, and to destroy the ammunition. This assured us retreat was intended.

The guns were moved off about 8 p.m. and joined the re of the artillery and Baggage, retiring in a most confused and manner, much increased by the bad state of the roads.

myself placed in charge on a Brigade of spare carriages, etc. Marched at eleven and reached Chazy at six-thirty a.m.

Sept. 12th.—Ordered to join the Heavy Brigade of Guns. Marched to Champlain and placed the guns in position.

Sept. 13th.—The rear-guard of the Army moved through Champlain at one-thirty p.m. Our advanced Picquet is posted about half a mile on the road to Chazy. The enemy had not the presumption to molest our rear. General Power's brigade had taken up its ground just within the American lines. Generals Robinson's and Brisbane's have fallen back. The weather for these last two days has been very bad. The heavy guns ordered to move to Odel Town, five miles, where we arrived at 8 p.m. The roads are in a most miserable state.

Sept. 14th.—The heavy guns ordered to Isle au Noix. I was to remain with a 24-pr. at Smith's Tavern, and at 6 p.m. received instructions to move with the gun and a proportion of rockets to Brisbane's house and landing place, 2½ miles, for the purpose of covering the embarkation of a depot of Commissariat and other stores. Lt.-Colonel Herriott and his Voltigeurs occupy this post. It is about three miles above La Cole Mill, and five from Ash Island. A Flag of Truce arrived this evening.

Sept. 15th.—Threw up a breast work to cover the gun, placed in barbette. Several of the enemy's gunboats came down with wounded.

There is a large proportion of Ordnance and Commissariat stores at this place, which will take some days to remove. If the enemy's flotilla were in a fit state, they could, with ease, prevent their being embarked, but in the event of their attempting to land, it would cost them a great number of men, from the confined scope they would find for disembarkation, and there being excellent cover for the Voltigeurs to annoy them from.

The 49th Regiment* embarked for Isle au Noix.

Sept. 16th.—The rain fell in torrents, and the roads are rendered nearly impassable.

A Flag arrived with more wounded, also Captain Pring, R.N. (the senior surviving Officer of our fleet), on his parole. He commanded the Linnet during the late action, and represents the conduct of the American Commodore Macdonnough as being the most delicate, honorable and kind. Thus they are making themselves respected by their generosity of character, as well as their gallantry.

Sept. 17th.—General Brisbane and staff passed yesterday, and General De Rottenburg this morning. The former for St. Johns, the latter for L'Acadie. Getting on rapidly with the embarkation. Suffered from wet and cold, being under canvas in an exposed situation.

* 41st. the 49th was ordered home, Jan., 1813

The failure of the expedition occasioned sentiments of dis

The grand scale on which the expedition was formed, supplies for the support of the Army, the great and des mishers, and moving on confident of victory and anxious to close. I am informed by many Officers who were with this Column, that they never witnessed on any occasion more animation amongst the Troops. When the order to retreat was received a murmur of discontent was heard in the ranks, and some difficulty was experienced in restraining the ardor of the Light Troops covering the advance of the Column. The feelings this retrogade movement occasioned were at the moment most painful to the spirits of the soldiers: it has since agitated the public mind, which must always feel interested and deeply concerned in the honor and success of the Navy and Army.

The general opinion is that, notwithstanding our Fleet had struck, in some measure owing to the non-co-operation of the land forces, the Column should have been allowed to follow up the attack, so as to have preserved the highly elevated character of the British Army and to have cut off the enemy, with his guns, stores, etc. Some assert that the guns of the enemy's works might have been turned upon the fleets as they were laying disabled in the confusion attending the close of so warm an action.

The unnecessary precipitancy of our retreat, or more properly speaking, our flight, on the night of the 11th, is spoken of with disgust and indignation—an army composed of 11000 of the very best troops, a large proportion of them inured to victory in the Peninsula, absolutely ordered to run away before 1500 of the most inferior description; and to the disgraceful rapidity of their flight sacrificing their sick and wounded, together with great quantities of ordnance and commissariat stores. What was to have prevented the Army remaining in its position to cover the retreat of its sick, wounded, stores, etc.? Surely the enemy was not to be dreaded!

The effect of this flight has been more seriously felt by the British Army than in the loss of stores, etc., for it has created a feeling of disgust from the General of Brigade to the Drum-boy; it has destroyed all confidence in the Commander-in-chief; it has also caused numerous desertions; it has deprived the soldiers of those innate ideas of superiority which animated every breast (but one) on this advance. And when it is understood that three of the Duke of Wellington's well-tried Generals and 8000 of his Veteran Troops composed the greater part of this Army, the remark cannot be attributed to gasconade. The following remark appears in the Montreal "Herald" of September 23rd, 1814:

"If a tenth part of what is alleged had any foundation, there must be a solemn national investigation, when the truth would be ascertained, and an acquittal with honor, or conviction with adequate punishment, follow."

The redoubts were open to a coup-de-main, and an attack should have taken place the first day. This measure was most anxiously pressed upon Sir G. Prevost: the unexpected delay gave the Enemy time to strengthen them, which he did not neglect to capture would have compelled his Fleet to meet ours terms. The Enemy was astonished at our inactivity and looked for the assault; in short, if the opposite feelings and indecision had animated a certain breast, the 11th o would have added another wreath to the Naval and Milit

of Great Britain. (Signed)

SOME U. E. LOYALIST EPITAPHS.

"Remnants of history . . . in which . . . is saved and recovered something from the deluge of time."—BACON.

One of the most interesting of the historic landmarks in Niagara is the mutilated tombstone in St. Mark's churchyard, which was used as a butcher's chopping-block by the American soldiers, while the invading forces were quartered in the old church during the War of 1812-14. The marks of the axe are still plainly seen on the marble, and the interest of the stone is increased by the fact that the inscription shows it was erected as a memorial for one who, at the time of the War of Independence, chose to suffer loss rather than give up his allegiance to his sovereign. The words have been partially effaced by time and the treatment to which it was subjected, but have been reconstructed to read as follows:

"To the memory of Charles Morrison, a native of Scotland, who resided many years at Michilimacinac as a merchant, and since the cession of that [post to the] United States, as a British subject by election. [He was distinguished] for loyalty to his Sovereign [ ]. Died here on his [way] to Montreal on the sixth day of September, 1802, aged 65."

Nor is this the only memorial which testifies to the strenuous loyalty of that day. The tablet in St. Mark's Church to the memory of Colonel John Butler, leader of the far-famed and much-dreaded Butler's Rangers, which is headed: "Fear God, honour the King," will recur to everyone, as well as that to Martin McLelland and one or two others, too well known to be quoted.

The existence of these, and hearing of others, led to the hasty inference that there were many such epitaphs to be found in different parts of the country; a conclusion that has not been borne out by experience. Nor is the reason far to seek. The Loyalists for the most part came as refugees, having been driven from their homes and stripped of all their property. They found the country an almost unbroken wilderness of woods and swamps, and for many years their life was a desperate struggle for existence, with the forest for their foe. Those who survived had not means to enable them to erect durable memorials for those who passed away during the early years of struggle and privation, and the rude wooden headstone that once marked the spot has long since perished, while time has obliterated the inscription placed on the scarcely more durable sandstone that was used in many cases. Thus, in our oldest churchyards, there are many shattered and crumbling stones—hardly to be distinguished from common field stones—which yet pathetically suggest memories of forgotten lives. Also, some of the original Loyalist band f the War of 1812, and with their comrades in arms found nar graves near the different fields of battle. From these and ki causes it is evident that most of these last records of the found the province have disappeared ; those that remain possess an in because many of them prove that, far from regretting the choice made for king and country, their allegiance held firm to the Those noted here may be taken as the result of some summer ra as giving the barest outline, which others may fill in. To cove subject it would be necessary to gather inscriptions from the provinces settled by Loyalists. This has not been attempted among the two or three from New Brunswick, one from K

County is interesting and not too familiar to bear quotation :

What is looked for may not be found—probably will not, if U. E. L. epitaphs—but the seeker may be rewarded by coming something unintentionally funny, as that on a stone erected to a young man "who was accidentally killed by the falling of a tree," and the lines "We cannot tell who next may fall beneath Thy chastening rod" immediately follow the statement. Or you may chance upon this warning, if in an eastern town, not so very far from Toronto :

> "Ye weak, beware ; here lies the strong,
> A victim of his strength.
> He lifted fourteen hundred pounds,
> And here he lies at length."

Or one may meet with something quite different,—

> "Full of hope and yet of heart-break,
> Full of all the tender pathos,
> Of the Here and the Hereafter."

As in the churchyard that surrounds the quaint old church at Stamford, where it is said of one, "Her existence in this life ended on the 10th day of April" in such a year. When at Chicoutimi some years ago, a search in the neglected churchyard, knee-deep in grass, tangled weeds and tall ox-eyed daisies, revealed the following tender record of one who must have been "lovely and pleasant in her life," for of her it is said, "She is speaking to God and to his angels of the friends she left behind her on earth."

A word as to the places where these old records may be found. Throughout the districts settled by U. E. Loyalists there are many private burying-grounds, some of which yet remain in the possession of descendants of the original owners. This custom prevailed particularly among the Dutch settlers. Of such is the Hamiltons' ground at Queenstown, which, it will be remembered, afforded a temporary resting-place for the body of Brock after the first monument had been destroyed and while the second was building. Such, too, is the Servos burial-ground, where many outside the family have found a resting-place, and that of the Balls, some miles from Niagara, with its darkened, time-worn stones, and the little group of graves, somewhat apart from the rest, where the faithful servants of long ago lie buried, giving us a glimpse of the patriarchal life of those early days. A hillside, or some conspicuous spot upon the farm was generally chosen, or sometimes, as upon the Bay of Quinte, the place where the wanderers had first landed was selected by the refugees as a last resting-place. One visited was situated on the banks of a stream, the high bluff overlooking river flats and winding valley, and the little town, surrounded by hills, that lies as in a shallow cup a mile or two beyond.

Many of these old family grounds have been broken up—the land of which they formed a part has changed owners, and in spite of agreements and pledges by the purchaser, the sacred plot has, af few years, been desecrated and memorials removed. Such has the fate of that belonging to the once powerful family of the Bu of Niagara, nor is it the only instance where such vandalism occurred.

But generally some common ground was set apart, and neigh and friends were laid side by side, all distinctions of creed forgotten, as surely they should be. Such was the old U. E. Lo burying-ground at Adolphustown, and there are instances of at Stamford, Grimsby, Weston, Barton, many through the B Quinte region, and in other places too numerous to mention, no anyone a complete list.

As to the inscriptions, by far the larger number give the bare and date only, and it is but by knowing something of the sto their lives that we can fill in the tale. This is the case even prominent Loyalists who were concerned in notable events; Ca Richard Lippincott lies buried not many miles from Toronto, b headstone gives name and date only, and there is no hint to re us of the romantic incidents of his life and the thrilling experi through which he passed during the Revolutionary War.

Sacred to the memory of

Richard Lippincott,

who departed this life May 16th, 1826, at the advanced age of 81 years.

Many similar instances could be given. There is one i James' Cathedral churchyard here, and several in St. John Hogg's Hollow. Everyone who has seen this picturesque chur it appears from the opposite side of the valley, nestling amon trees, with the hill rising beyond it, must have been struck wi likeness to the country churches in England; nor is a nearer disappointing. Though plainly built of white brick, faced stone, and quite unornamented with carving, it is yet so perfectl symmetrically proportioned that, viewed from every side, it pleasure; and its situation on the brow of the sunny wind-swep is so fine that one has not the heart to blame the unpractica jectors who set it there, only to be reached by a breathless cli a hill, too long and steep for the old, for the delicate, or the young of the congregation.

In the churchyard surrounding it are several Loyalist epitaph with the exception of that to Thomas Humberstone, which r that "he was born in Philadelphia and came to Yonge St. in there is nothing distinctive about them, just the name and dat

lowed by a text or verse expressing the grief of the survivors. It is, perhaps, a digression to note some of the other stones. Of one it is said, "She was a kind and industrious woman," while her husband was "an energetic and an honest man." This recalls the stone at Lundy's Lane erected to one "who died an honest man," which inevitably makes us wonder whether he lived as one.

Another large class of U. E. epitaphs mention the place from which the refugee came. Two or three of these are taken from the pretty, restful churchyard at Grimsby, where a profusion of white roses and lilies of the valley make the opening summer glorious, and the trim little church has a quaint, picturesque dignity all its own.

In memory of

John Beamer,

a native of New Jersey, who emigrated to Canada in 1790, and died Feb. 9th, 1854, aged 94 years.

Sacred to the memory of

Andrew Pettit,

born in Gaston, Penn., U.S., 23rd March, 1753.
He was a resident of Sussex Co., N.Y., for 16 years and was married there, and settled in Grimsby, 1787;
Died May 15th, 1819.

Sarah, his wife,

born in Germantown, N.J., 6th November, 1758:
Died 17th October, 1841.

There are also monuments to the two brothers, Colonel Robert and Lt.-Col. William Nelles, which commemorate, as those last quoted, the date of their migration to Canada, and, in addition, the number of years spent in the land of their adoption.

In memory of

Colonel Robert Nelles,

who was born on 6th of October, 1761, in Palatine, on the Mohawk River, State of N.Y., and died 27th July, 1842, at Grimsby, after a residence of 62 years in Canada.

In memory of

Lt.-Col. William Nelles,

born 17th August, 1769, in Palatine, on the Mohawk River, State of New York, died 20th April, 1850, at Grimsby, after a residence of 63 years in Canada.

These are examples of the records to be found at Grimsby an other places. That of the Nelles is noted, not that it differs fro the two first cited, but because it is interesting to know that th large substantial stone house, built by one of the brothers, more tha a hundred years ago, is still standing, a fine specimen of the bett class of houses erected by the refugees. The massive walls, the lo broad windows, the quaint lines of roof and chimney impress o with a sense of solidity and comfort, and this suggests a field research as yet almost touched. What sort of houses did the U. Loyalists build when the first dread years of hunger and strugg had passed? Is it not possible that there may be an early coloni style for Canada? Not much encouragement for this idea is to found in books. All the histories, local or other, speak of the roug log-house, or shanty rather—few roomed and miserable—yet th house, with one or two other well-known examples, witnesses something better. Mr. William Kirby, the distinguished author "Le Chien d'Or," has indeed suggested that it is likely that th better classes of Loyalists coming from the different States woul as soon as the first stress was over, build houses resembling those the locality from which they had been driven, so that possibly tw or three styles might be traced, and in accordance with his idea h made a sketch of the kind of dwelling that one of the Dutch refuge from New York would be likely to build.

Grimsby churchyard possesses yet another interesting epitaph one who was a leader in his day, and thought and spoke strongly o the issues of the time.

In memory of the

Hon. John Willson,

Born in New Jersey, Aug. 5th, 1776; settled in Canada, A.D. 1790.

He was elected a member of the Assembly of U. C. A.D. 1808; was Speaker of that body from 1823 to 1830. In 1839 he was called to the Legislative Council, and took his seat in 1840, to oppose the Union of the Provinces; he originated the Common School Law of U. C.

Died at his residence, Ontario,* in his 84th year, May 26th, 1860.

* The name of Ontario was changed to Winona.

The two which follow are grouped together, as showing with a quite unconscious pathos how deep and ineffaceable was the impression made by the emigration, with its attendant hardships and dangers, upon even the children of the Loyalists.

Dennis Woolverton,

born in New Jersey on New Year's Day, 1790; emigrated to Canada in 1798, and settled at Grimsby.
Member of the Legislative Assembly of U.C., 1836-38, and of Niagara District Council for many years.
Died May 23rd, 1876.

Elizabeth Hixson,

wife of James Cooper,

born in the Province of New Jersey; emigrated to Canada in 1788. Died 14th July, 1855, in her 83rd year.

After a long life, in each case exceeding the fourscore years of the Psalmist, the migration remained a great outstanding feature of their experience, and as such was recognized by those who came after them, as worthy of being recorded in their life's brief epitome.

It would be tedious to give further instances where the State from which the refugee came has been carefully recorded. Such may be found in several of the graveyards, and must always be interesting, not only to the descendants of those who there lie sleeping, but to all who care for our early history. Occasionally some further fact may be gleaned by the curious, as from the stones of the Bedell family in the old churchyard near the battle-ground at Stoney Creek; a churchyard still, though the old church, in which, on the night of the sudden attack under Harvey and FitzGibbon, an advance outpost of the American Army was stationed, was bodily removed some years ago and is now used as a barn. These stones record that Stephen Bedell, who died in 1837, aged 92 years, was a native of Staten Island, while Susan, his wife, who lived to be 84, was born at White Hall, N.Y., and it is found from an adjoining stone which gives New Brunswick as the birth-place of a member of their family, that Bedell was one of those Loyalists who first sought a home in that province and later moved to Upper Canada. An inscription to "the eldest daughter of the late Col. Samuel Smith, Queen's Rangers," recalls that noted Loyalist regiment, and is one of the very few which mention regimental honors. Another example may be given from the old burying-ground at Homer, near St. Catharines :

In memory of

Solomon Secord,

Lieutenant in Col. Butler's Troop of Rangers ; died Jan. 22nd, 1799, aged 42 years.

In another class of epitaphs, the addition of the one word "Loyalist," or the initials " U. E. L.," bespeak pride in the name, as these from Homer :

Isaac Secord,

U. E. Loyalist, died April 23rd, 1817, aged 72 years.

Capt. Jacob A. Ball,

U. E. Loyalist, died July 24th, 1820, aged 43 years.

One instance is still to be found at Adolphustown, where the inscription suggests that the sons were covetous of their father's honor " Being the son of a U.E. Loyalist he retained his loyalty to the British Crown to the end of life."

Finally there are a few inscriptions that briefly refer to their loyalty and to the sufferings it entailed upon them. The examples given are all from a single stone in the old Methodist churchyard at Weston.

In memory of

Henry Dennis,

who, an exile from his native State, Pennsylvania, and having had his estate confiscated for his attachment to British rule through the American Revolution, died a U. E. Loyalist on Staten Island in the year 1782, aged 62 years.

John, son of the above.

Who, also a U. E. Loyalist, expatriated on account of his services to the Crown during the same revolution, found for a time a resting-place in Nova Scotia, then in New Brunswick, and finally in Upper Canada.

Born, Penn., 1760 ; died, York, U.C., 1832.

Surely a tender humor dictated the verse which follows: "There remaineth a rest for the people of God."

The north side of the monument is inscribed:

To the memory of

Joseph, son of John Dennis.

A loyal and patriotic citizen, he served his country faithfully in the Defence of the Province during the War of 1812. Born at Beaver Harbour, N.B., 1789; died at Weston, U.C., 1867.

The following interesting record is found on the south side:

To the memory of

John Gray.

One of Frazer's Highlanders, under the immortal Wolfe, he scaled the Heights of Quebec and fought with distinguished bravery throughout the memorable day which added Canada to the British Empire.

Born in Mull, Argyleshire, 1732;
Died at Kingston, U.C., 1829.

One cannot but wonder why the last inscription was placed there, though from the stones near it is gathered that Gray became connected with the family through the marriage of his daughter, Ann, to William Stoughton, of Kingston, father of the Rev. John Stoughton, at one time Rector of Bath, U.C. A further explanation is given by a descendant, who writes that when the pillar was being erected it was felt there should be some memorial of one who had taken an active part in the great historic battle which led to the acquisition of Canada for the British Crown. Col. Dennis, therefore, had his name placed on the monument in Weston, although, as it relates, he died and was buried in Kingston.

Gray lived until his 93rd year, and his claymore remained in the possession of the family until a comparatively recent date. The old man was always ready to talk his battles over with anyone willing to listen, and never tired of relating an unfortunate incident of the battle which concerned himself.

He was, it seems, a man of fiery temper at times, and on the memorable occasion of September 19, 1759, being in the 78th, or

Fraser's Highlanders, under Wolfe, with the regiment he c

When the opposing armies gave battle he was among the fo in the fray, and managed to capture a French standard fr bearer. A young British officer, his superior in rank, imme demanded the flag, and attempted to take it from him. He, nant at being thus deprived of the fruits of his bravery, rai hand as if to strike the officer, but recollecting himself m bility, have been shot; as it was he was reduced in rank, and been a non-commissioned officer became a private. He, to th been caused by numerous petty annoyances which superiors can

The few scattered examples of these wayside records tha times called, remained true to their principles—small wonde
